Pursue Certifications & Designations That Reflect Your Interests and Responsibilities

Becoming a Certified Community Association Manager (CCAM) demonstrates that you have the fundamental knowledge and skills needed to manage a community association effectively. Once you secure your CCAM, explore the next level of educational opportunities. Why not consider a specialty in High Rise, Large Scale, Portfolio Management or New Development Community Management. You can earn designations in addition to the certificate, including adjunct specialty designations for Age-Restricted Adult Community Management and Commercial & Industrial CID Management and Lifestyle Management. Additionally, those who focus primarily on finance and accounting within the industry are welcome to earn the Community Association Financial Management (CAFM) certification, while management executives may choose to earn the designation for Community Association Management Executives (CAMEx). CACM's Master of Community Association Management (MCAM) is the highest California community association management certification available.
